

Hey, I'm Rohan.

I make ads for DTC brands. Pretty much the whole thing, creative strategy and editing, I figure out the angle, write the script, cut the video, design the statics, then look at what the numbers did and make the next batch better. Also worked in diff languages.

AI ads, UGC, VSLs, product ads, image ads. Been at it for 2 years with many brands, creators, agency owners, mostly fashion, supplements, apparel, skincare, footwear, spa/wellness and few others.

Everything I know came from actually working with clients, then studying through YT plus Ecom Talent, Evolve.

Clients I've made ads for: Taos, Dose, Royal Canadian, Southwind apparel, Motion, Serenity Studio, FabuLove, Cloudly Footwear plus agencies and ugc creators, many dropshippers, Spa owners, studio owners.

Niches: I've made ads across men's and women's clothing, footwear, supplements, skincare, beauty, jewellery, lingerie and sleepwear, apparel, spa and wellness, and travel. Mostly US and UK brands, plus a 1 in Norwegian, I've shipped campaigns in Swedish and worked in SEK accounts.

The range matters less than the pattern.

Stuff I do

AI gen — real-looking creators, full ads, generated start to finish.

Strategy — dig through reviews and competitor ads, find the angle, write the brief, plan what to test.

Scripts — UGC scripts, VSLs, hooks, CTAs. Written for one type of person, not everyone.

Video — UGC edits, product ads, mashups, motion, captions, sound. Made to feel native, not like an ad.

Statics — image ads, callouts, before/afters, comparison charts, thumbnails.

Managing it — briefing creators, handling revisions, keeping fresh creative going into the account so nothing goes stale.

Keeping it clean — this is diff. Creative trackers, naming conventions, a log of every ad with its angle, hook, spend and result. Your ad account stops being a mess and you can actually see what's working.

Script writing format

I know you might be using diff naming and stuff but I just want you to know that i have experience working with diff formats and naming to track everything.
